

The Award-Winning Photos of Nancy Ney

By Rita Sandomer

Inspirational, diverse, and exotic best describe Nancy Ney's photographs, which she presented at the Camera Club meeting in February. This award-winning photographer makes the ordinary extraordinary. She captures the personalities of foreign lands and the people who live there in a very compelling way, often with close-ups of people against very simple backgrounds. This also applies to her wildlife portraits. She has a fantastic sense of light and dark.

She has ventured bravely into foreign settings, such as the African desert, to photograph tribe members, stunning scenery, and wildlife. Her compositions are quietly dramatic and breathtaking.

We were fortunate that Nancy was available and willing to present a wide cross-section of her work at the Camera Club meeting. The opportunity to see her award-winning images attracted a sizeable crowd.

Stay tuned for announcements about the next camera club meeting.

In Thailand, a woman of the Karen tribe posed in traditional brass neck coils for Nancy.
