i live for each present moment,
absorbing each experience, each drop and bit
of fun and life like a welcome cool cloth on a summer-sweaty forehead.

i live for each present moment,
and in some of the present moments lie hidden sparks and tiny gems of where,
why,
who i'll someday want to be-- after many more present moments.

i live each present moment--
to enjoy,
to make it the best--
each one somehow based on past-present moments and offering me a tidbit for future-present moments,
to enjoy,
to make it the best,
to really live. . .
