

RAVISHING REDHEADS

photographs by Gary Kramer

A photograph of two people and a dog wading in a body of water at sunset. The sky is a mix of orange, yellow, and blue. The water is calm, reflecting the sky. There are several ducks in the water. The two people are in the center, wading towards the right. The dog is on the left, also wading. The overall mood is peaceful and serene.

Brunettes are a blast, and blondes can be bombshells, but there's something ravishing about redheads.

We're talking ducks, of course. Those rusty-topped divers that winter on the Texas Gulf. They gather in the thousands—cruising the marshes, bays and waterfront sandbars. Wary of blind dates. . . .

Hang out in the right place and be patient, and you might score.
A willing blonde may even help with the pick-up.

The ultimate wingman.

Once you've made your play, it's time to clean up and head home.
Perhaps making plans for another engagement.

After all, there's no getting enough of those drop-dead gorgeous redheads.
(We are still talking about ducks, right?)
